Steve Hargadon from California, USA presents

'School 2.0: Where We're Headed and What to Do About It'

Significant changes are taking place in our society and culture, largely driven by the participative and collaborative technologies of the Web. These technologies have the potential to dramatically (and quickly) change public expectations of the role of schools in teaching and learning, and we are about to have the largest discussion about education we've had in decades, maybe longer.

Sheryl Nussbaum-Beach from Virginia, USA presents

'Effective School Leadership through Technology: The 21st Century Administrator'

As the people of the world are becoming increasingly connected, the nature, use, ownership, and purpose of knowledge are changing in profound ways.

Our goal as educational leaders is to leverage these connections and changes as powerful means to improving teaching and learning in our schools.
